Kahn

Looking for an Academic Job: General Advice and Outline

A. Finding job ads

This varies entirely by field: some professional organizations list ads (the MLA), some have crowdsourced spreadsheets (ecology), figure out where jobs are listed in your discipline by asking faculty/other grad students. Some big clearinghouses:

a. AcademicKeys.com

b. Higheredjobs.com

C. Process

for more materials (e.g. timelines)

campus visits

D. General advice

conversation with yourself about your limits. How long are you willing to look for an applied for jobs for three years—probably around 200 applications total—and got rejected from 199 of those jobs. Rejection is the norm.

And apart from...

ask faculty to look over your materials and give you feedback. Two kinds of faculty you should ask, in particular: dissertation directors whose graduate students have gotten jobs and young faculty who have recently been on the market.

Use Interfolio, an easier service that stores your recommenders' letters, which means you only have to ask for one letter instead of having to constantly bug faculty